

Local Government Sustainability Practices, 2015 Summary Report – March 2016

The 2015 Local Government Sustainability Practices Survey is a joint project of ICMA, the Sustainable Communities and Small Town and Rural Planning Divisions of the American Planning Association, Binghamton University, Cornell University, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The survey was administered in paper format via direct mail, with an online submission option. The survey was sent to 8,562 local governments and achieved a response rate of 22.2%, with 1,899 local governments responding.

Survey Highlights

- While 47.3% of responding jurisdictions identify environmental protection as a priority (Question 1), only 31.5% report adoption of a sustainability plan (Q2).
- Survey results suggest that the economic impacts of sustainability efforts are very important to local governments.
 - Among jurisdictions that have adopted a sustainability plan, 67.6% indicate that those plans contain goals or strategies for economic development (Q2a).
 - Potential for fiscal savings and potential to attract development projects are among the top five motivating factors for local government sustainability efforts (Q35).
- Survey results suggest a greater need for public engagement around sustainability
 - 58.6% of responding jurisdictions report that public participation has had little or no impact in shaping sustainability plans and strategies (Q12).
- The five factors most commonly reported as being “significant” or “very significant” in motivating local governments’ sustainability efforts are as follows (Q35):
 1. Potential for fiscal savings
 2. Leadership of local elected officials
 3. Federal or state funding opportunities
 4. Potential to attract development projects
 5. Concern over the environment.
- The five factors most commonly reported as being “significant” or “very significant” in hindering local governments’ sustainability efforts are as follows (Q35):
 1. Lack of funding
 2. State or federal funding restrictions
 3. Lack of staff capacity/support
 4. Lack of information on how to proceed
 5. Lack of community/resident support.
