

The play "A Raisin in the Sun" and interview of the writer of the play included in my exhibit depict different and unique viewpoints on the American Dream. The photographs in my exhibit show not only the unfair treatment and discriminations African Americans have endured in the mid-20th century, but they also present to the viewers the persistent efforts of those people in their jobs and careers to make a living and to realize their dreams. However, these discriminations not only existed last century. Racial issues are still one of the major problems in society in parts of America today.
